PLACE MAKER CALUM SRIGLEY is an award-winning designer, architectural visualizer and illustrator who specializes in architectural theming and placemaking. He is passionate about heightening a viewers' perception and understanding of how place affects our experiences. Training at the School of Architecture, University of Edinburgh, Scotland, and 25 years experience have given him a working knowledge of many or most architectural styles. He is continually expanding his knowledge and has one of the largest private libraries of architectural books in Vancouver.

Calum works in his studio from a design brief or within a team setting on-site, at design charrettes, envisioning sessions and planning meetings, producing sketch designs and graphics that illustrate the discussion and communicate "place". His large and varied client list includes resort and residential developers as well as architects.

"I am fascinated by the language of villages and towns. The buildings, forms and spaces, details and materials are shaped by nature, whimsy and everyday life. The village becomes the story of its inhabitants, and that's what my drawings do. They tell the story of a place."
